

PROFESSIONAL DEVELOPMENT SEMINAR

NATIVE TREE DECLINE in FOREST and WOODLAND of the SOUTH WEST

Native tree decline is becoming alarmingly widespread across south-western Australia due to a range of factors including insect attack, pathogens and disease, water stress, pollutants, poor pruning methods and loss of understorey vegetation. Consequences of native tree decline and the subsequent death of native trees include loss of ecological and social values.

Green Skills and the Tuart Health Research Group at Murdoch University, will be hosting a highly informative seminar, specifically designed for Environmental Professionals.

This workshop will update you on the latest scientific and practical information about improving the health of native trees and managing tree decline in our changing environment; including:

- Native species affected by decline,
- The extent and severity of native tree decline,
- Recognising the symptoms and causal factors of tree decline,
- Practical management options for sick trees, and
- Preventing native tree decline.

- WHEN: Tuesday 20th October 2009, 9am-12.30pm
- WHERE: Environmental Technology Centre
Murdoch University,
Murdoch Drive, MURDOCH
